PLEASE VOTE FOR FOUR CANDIDATES, KEEPING DISCIPLINARY DIVERSITY IN MIND:

____ SHARON FARMER, History, University of California, Santa Barbara

____ NATALIE GRINNELL, Wofford College

My interests are women in literature, literacy and science. I would like to address the concerns and circumstances of scholars from smaller, non-research schools, both public and private.

____ LAINÉ DOGGETT, French, Honors College of Florida Atlantic University

Statement: As a member of the SMFS advisory board, I would seek to advance scholarship in medieval feminism, further support the community of medieval feminists, and explore new ways to connect with feminists in other disciplines.

____ MIRIAM SHADIS, History, Ohio University

Statement: My research field is 12th and 13th century French and Iberian Women’s History, focusing currently on queenship and religious life, motherhood. I see the SMFS as an important venue for all feminist medievalist scholars, but especially for younger scholars and independent scholars without institutional “homes.” In my experience, the SMFS provides such a home. In terms of scholarship, I would like to see continued emphasis on women’s studies per se and interdisciplinarity. In terms of the professional development of feminist researchers and teachers, I am committed to the potential for mentoring and networking that SMFS provides.

____ SALLY POOR, German, Stanford University

Statement: As an advisory board member, I am interested in promoting and supporting feminist medievalists in the lesser-taught languages like German, thereby helping them to reach a larger community of medievalists while at the same time enriching and enlarging the SMFS community base.

——— MONICA GREEN, History, Duke University

Statement: During her tenure on the SMFS Board, she would like to see the Society explore ways to support training and research in primary sources (manuscripts, archival collections, etc.). She is particularly interested in seeing the Society collectively explore the meanings of interdisciplinarity and the impact new interdisciplinary trends have on the training of graduate students.

RETURN TO: Barbara F. Weissberger, Dept. of Foreign Languages & Literatures, Old Dominion University, Norfolk, VA 23529-0085 by 30 September 2000.
