

queries, and bibliography to more formal commentary. We are looking for suggestions for teaching and research on such subjects as the construction of ethnicity in the Middle Ages and/or the Renaissance; the history of racial contact (e.g., in travel narratives, crusades, exploration); the construction of race in historical, literary and art historical sources; race and religion; medieval and/or Renaissance colonialism (e.g., England, Ireland, and Wales; Germanic invasions; later contact with the Americas); medieval sources of non-Western cultures; race and national identity; anti-Semitism (Jews and Arabs); sexuality and ethnicity. In general we are interested in discussion of the construction of difference across race, class, and gender. Comments on sources for future research are particularly welcome.

Please send your ideas for contributions to the General Editor for 1993-94, Elizabeth Robertson, by September 15. Final copy is due October 15.

MEDIEVAL FEMINIST ART HISTORY PROJECT: CALL FOR SYLLABI

The Medieval Feminist Art History Project would like to receive syllabi from teachers who have found ways of incorporating feminist approaches into the teaching of medieval art. This call is not restricted to art historians. We intend to make brief descriptions available so that others interested in using such material in their teaching can write for complete syllabi. Descriptions will become part of the second list of participants in the Medieval Feminist Art History Project. If you would like to be included in or receive the list, or if you have syllabi to share, please write to: Pamela Sheingorn, Art Department, Box 281, Baruch College, CUNY, 17 Lexington Avenue, New York, NY 10010.
