MARY FLANAGAN

a pure subjective commitment is possible

I'll tell you
    what it is. I'll tell you outcry.
We drive. Grey gets inside the car and exhausts your mouth. Notions of telling. Road bends—we see over brushwood thickets.

Dressed for Sunday, mopmakers whose hands have scrubbed corners from church toilets, stillborn pennies; easy—find a course of violets, tie a small cloth.

Instructions for living in coal mines. We peat a little, sinking. After confessions and ammonia. After coughing, caring for small too cold. Here—mothers bring final things.

Little knots on trees make a sorry each,
mighty woods bend heavy, hair locks bear tiny socks, keen those hands. How we come to blessing.
