

The Iowa Review

Volume 37 Issue 3 Winter 2007-2008

Article 16

2007

Two Poems on Pickerel Lake

Terry Savoie

Follow this and additional works at: http://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Savoie, Terry. "Two Poems on Pickerel Lake." The Iowa Review 37.3 (2007): 94-95. Web. Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.6267

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

TERRY SAVOIE

Two Poems on Pickerel Lake

1. 1951

Five & I am buoyantly on my back while looking up under the girlish under-skirts of willows leaning out over the shoreline as Mamma calls from the safety of her screened-in cabin porch on the hillside, calling for me to hurry in, can't I see how thunderclouds are moving in fast?

I splash in & run up the hill to her cold arms & a beach towel, shivering in the sudden cool, uninvited breeze, looking back into the trees behind me, their supple limbs bending, submitting.

2. 2001

94

A cool September evening & my boat in perfect lullaby, gently rocking to the gibbous moonrise near the drop-off where I fish alone for milk-eyed walleye down deep just beyond

The Iowa Review STOR ®

www.jstor.org

stagnant algae & inside a rim of coontail & green cabbage weed.

Drifting a jig-&-minnow, I wait for the tap-tapping of a whiskered father beneath me before setting the hook & calling out to him to rise as I imagine

Lazarus once rose from the dead, Lazarus who, at first, couldn't believe his unimagined fortune, the seemingly impossible just made possible, a second chance, a miracle until he noticed, as each star-struck fish I pull from the depths notices, a barbed hook far back & planted deep in his soft gullet. In the moonlight, I watch nervous waterstriders, those Jesus-bugs, as they walk on the water beyond the boat's bow, their spindly shrews' legs skittishly skating the lake's surface under the month's full moon shining down, a fuller moon shining up.