vol. 8, no. 3, November 1998

PRESIDENT'S PIECE

As my year as ILA/ACRL president draws to a close, a lot of people have made comments to me indicating that it must be a relief to have it over. While it will be nice not to have to worry that I have forgotten some report or deadline, I have thoroughly enjoyed this year because of the delightful people with whom I have worked both within ACRL and in ILA generally. Fortunately, I don't have to feel too sad about leaving them. Not only does the past president continue on the Board, but there are always many opportunities to serve in ILA/ACRL. I am pleased that some of our new colleagues in the state have leapt into the fray serving as committee members and chairs. If this organization is to continue to be a valuable forum for Iowa academic and research librarians, however, we need all of you. Reduced staffs and budgets, new technology, publishing gluts, etc. have made us all busier but I continue to believe that interchange with our colleagues is one of the most important activities we can pursue to maintain our professionalism.

For many of us the cost of attending national meetings is often prohibitive but we can find an amazing level of expertise and experience among ourselves here in Iowa. The conferences, listserv and web page, directory, and newsletter are all vital for keeping us in touch with our professional community and they only function if people are willing to work with them. The committee slots are filled for this year, but if you aren't serving on a committee this year or running for an office, please consider doing so next year. We need your ideas and energy and I think you will be pleasantly surprised at the benefits you will receive.

Mary Beveridge --- 1998 ILA/ACRL President, Drake University

THANK YOU, MARY BEVERIDGE

Chris Neuhaus, in a message to the ILA-ACRL Board, expressed what all of feel. We are reprinting his message here.

"I would like to take this brief electronic moment to thank Mary Beveridge for her wonderful performance as president of ILA/ACRL.

Like many of you, I have been grateful for Mary's energy, wisdom, and leadership over the past year. Mary's role in hosting the joint Iowa/Nebraska Spring Conference at Drake was greatly appreciated. Mary's performance as chair of the Executive Board was highly effective as was her role in coordinating our many committees. That our Chapter continues to be a strong and healthy organization is a testimonial to Mary's successful style of leadership. That she has gained the long lasting friendship and admiration of so many throughout the state is a testimonial to her most generous personality and spirit.

Please join me in thanking Mary for a job very well done."

Chris Neuhaus, University of Northern Iowa

PROCLAMMATION OF THANKS

ILA-ACRL had hoped to have this read at the ILA Annual Conference Luncheon. As that did not occur, it is here for all to read.

The Iowa Chapter, Association of College and Research Libraries expresses its appreciation to Dorothy Persson for her service to the Chapter as Spring conference photographer in 1997 and 1998, Governmental Relations Representative in 1997 and her service as past president, on committees and her tireless advocacy for the section and ILA in general.

1998 FALL CONFERENCE

ILA Annual Conference, 1998 - ILA/ACRL Speaker

"Collaboration Out of Chaos: The Challenges and the Rewards" By Barbara McFadden Allen
Barbara McFadden Allen, Assistant Director of the Committee on Institutional Cooperation (Champaign, Illinois) and Director of the CIC Center for Library Initiatives, spoke to the challenges and the rewards of interinstitutional library cooperation, with specific reference to the experience of the twelve CIC member institutions, at the ILA Annual Conference. Her presentation was sponsored by ILA/ACRL and the Bibliographic Center for Research.

In her remarks, Ms. Allen outlined the governing principles of the CIC: that no one institution should attempt to serve all of the needs of all of the people; interinstitutional cooperation permits experimentation on a scale larger than that attainable by a single institution; and, perhaps most importantly, voluntary cooperation fosters action while preserving diversity and institutional autonomy. Ms. Allen noted that the CIC libraries are committed to the creation of a consortial organization by the year 2000 which will be guided by a vision of information resources as a "seamless whole, whether those resources are developed or owned individually or collectively." CIC library initiatives include collaborative management of, and access to both traditional collections and electronic resources, and the collaborative development of new types of digital information systems. Current projects include a Virtual Electronic Library, which will utilize OCLC WebZ software, OCLC PRISM services, and the Internet to provide a customizable interface and a seamless connection to bibliographic and circulation information from a variety of sources.

Drawing on her extensive experience with resource-sharing projects, Ms. Allen summarized the opportunities inherent in interinstitutional cooperation and collaboration - enhanced services, leveraged investments, a proactive approach to managing a changing environment, and professional development. She emphasized that the greatest challenge to cooperative ventures is in developing, and remaining focused, on a clear vision or joint direction. She noted a number of factors she believes necessary for successful collaboration - the perception of benefits accrued, a focus on enhancing services, provision for varied levels of participation in group projects, a trust borne of association with peers, with similar size institutions and similar missions, and a central administrative entity, however modest.

Ms. Allen's presentation was followed by a discussion session, entitled "Interinstitutional Cooperation: Iowa Librarians Explore the Possibilities," which she helped facilitate. Participants described cooperative projects underway and envisioned, and discussed some of the perceived barriers to enhanced collaboration. Several avenues for possible cooperation were identified, licensing of electronic resources, and cooperative collection development being of considerable interest. Ms. Allen encouraged the attendees to designate responsibility for particular projects, indicating that success is more likely when a single individual or entity will take on primary responsibility for running a project from which others will benefit. She cautioned against overly ambitious projects, those for which the necessary resources may not be available. Above all, she emphasized the need for a common vision and mission around which projects may be constructed.

Ms. Allen identified a number of resources of potential usefulness to those interested in interinstitutional collaboration. These include the CIC Web site <http://www.cic.uiuc.edu/index.html>, and the site maintained by the International Coalition of Library Consortia <http://www.library.yale.edu/consortia/>.

CALL FOR PRESENTATIONS

Here the call that went out on the listserv for presenters for the Spring Conference. Repetition is sometimes a good reminder.

Dear ILA/ACRL Member:

The ILA/ACRL Annual Spring Conference will be held on Friday, May 7, 1999, at the University of Northern Iowa in Cedar Falls. Please consider seriously whether you might like to give a presentation at this conference (remember, you will be talking to your Iowa colleagues). We will have 6 to 8 slots for contributed presentations.

Call for Presentations ILA/ACRL Spring Conference May 7, 1999 - University of Northern Iowa, Cedar Falls Deadline for Receipt: February 12, 1999

Do you have ideas you would like to share with your colleagues? Would you like an opportunity to present a conference paper? An afternoon of contributed papers is being planned for the 1999 ILA/ACRL Spring Conference. Individuals are invited to submit proposals for presentations. Sessions will last 45 minutes, and individuals are encouraged to hold a question-and-answer discussion period for the last 15 minutes of this time.

Your presentation should address academic library concerns. Complete this form and write a one-page summary describing the content of your presentation. Your proposal will be reviewed by a selection committee. To assist the committee, please prepare one copy of this form, one copy of your summary with your name, and four copies of your summary without your name.

[snip....] The [application] form can be found on the ILA/ACRL Web page (as part of the main menu; <http://www.iowaacrl.org>). The form's direct URL is: <http://www.iowaacrl.org/iacrldir/callpap99.html>.

There will be one free conference registration for each accepted presentation proposal. I am looking forward to receiving your presentation proposal.
