1983

The Unresolved Snapshot

Christanne Balk

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/ijls

Part of the English Language and Literature Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0743-2747.1081

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in Iowa Journal of Literary Studies by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
The two girls, caught shrugging
Just as the shutter snapped,
Have brown, furry spots
Where their eyes should be.
Their mouths have no openings.
They are shadowy and soft
As if half-dissolved into each other,
They lean toward their father,
Whose arms and shoulders
Surround them like a doorjamb.
Two cloth overnight bags sit
Hunched over on the sidewalk.
Today is the last day of July,
The day the girls go back
To their mother’s house.
Their father’s face seemed seered
By smalt-colored streaks
Thrown, in lines, from the trees.
His hair is trampled flat,
Springing up in patches
To poke angry fingers
At the beryl sky,
The livid sky which hangs
Above the three of them.
Behind them, the street tips.
Cars, trees, and houses sit angled,
Askew with the foreground,
Barely balanced on the slope.