Bayh will not run for re-election to senate

This is breaking news inside the beltway, but getting many twitter messages seems very unlikely.

News Alert: Sen. Evan Bayh to retire
10:40 AM EST Monday, February 15, 2010
--------------------

Indiana Sen. Evan Bayh (D) will not seek re-election this year, a decision that hands Republicans a prime pickup opportunity in the middle of the country.

Bayh will announce the decision at a press conference later today. He was first elected to the Senate in 1998 and was re-elected easily in 2004. National Republicans had recruited former Sen. Dan Coats to challenge Bayh in 2010 although polling suggested Bayh began the race with a 20-point edge. He also had $13 million in the bank at the end of the year.

This should be the quintessential breaking news inside the beltway that attracts little attention outside.

The search term was Bayh election.

The search concluded April 6, 2010 with a total of 2645 messages. Apparently Evan Bayh retiring from the Senate was not worth much commenting on Twitter.

The figure show the distribution over time.

There was a single large spike on the announcement, and after that about as close to nothing as you can get.

The files are bayh election.xml and bayh election.txt, which is a tab delimited file that can be read with Excel.
