Standing in Line at Sunday Matinee

Charles Casey Martin

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/ijls

Part of the English Language and Literature Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0743-2747.1115

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in Iowa Journal of Literary Studies by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
STANDING IN LINE AT SUNDAY MATINEE

Charles Casey Martin

an elegy for Ethel Thompson Roberts

Across the alley, Baptist children in Sunday clothes
Play on the church lawn. Though closed and locked
The shops along Central Avenue
Are still in business. We stand in line. An usher
Stands on a ladder and spells Held Over in marquee fonts.
One of the E’s is a backward 3. I point to you

And hold up two fingers. The cashier says “five”
And shows the palm of her hand. We stand
In line. We prefer
The film to the book: if the heroine died
The heroine doesn’t have to die
Though applause simply adds to the confusion
As we crowd through the exit,

Holding hands, squinting in the sunlit lobby.
Surprised:
That darkness isn’t always night,
That death wasn’t the final absence,
Closed by the end as the body heals an open grave.
We stand in line. Remembering

The circle of children, hand in hand in hand,
Who all fell singing into the churchyard grass.
And our memory is the beginning
Of a past described by missing faces:

The four or five empty seats
In a theatre filled for the occasion.