

1970

The Eagle

Dennis Saleh

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Saleh, Dennis. "The Eagle." The Iowa Review 1.4 (1970): 26-26. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.1126>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

THE EAGLE

In the chill orange light of the suggestion of fires
our leaders are convening.
They are meeting
like a field in a wind,
and hush, or stir, or part
with the ache of great reluctance.
Listen to the cry.
One of the leaders is remembering.
He remembers America.
He remembers himself.
He was as fine
and as polished as a Chrysler.
He insists. He demands.
He says
“We didn’t say shit.”
And who is to say.

Across everything there is silence.
Nothing done, nothing said.
Who wants anyone to die.
Who wants anyone killed.
Only a child—and so young,
he won’t say it.
He is dying.
All he thinks of is living.
Sometimes he can only perspire.
The country is swelling in him.
He is ready to fall open.
He is ready for the one cold night
when his breath escapes him
and trembles in the air,
and is an eagle,
and is what is being done to him,
and is what killed him.