

1971

Lincoln in Love

George Keithley

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Keithley, George. "Lincoln in Love." The Iowa Review 2.3 (1971): 22-23. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.1225>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

LINCOLN IN LOVE

When we hear the song
of two tanagers
and stand in the warm
shade of an elm
it's the same as it was in my dream.
But in the dream
it was night and no one was waiting for you. It was a summer night and
yet the yellowthroats
and two tanagers
were out. We sat
watching them courting
across the river,
chasing each other
beyond the bank. We said nothing and there was no need to.
One bird calling and one bird answering—
but by daylight
whatever they sing
is a mystery.
It means nothing
at all or whatever
it was was lost
in my long ears.

I believe the birds
must know the words
but they won't say.
They like to see
you and me suffer
this way. They enjoy
the chagrin of children like us. Of course it won't be better
before it's worse.
They must cherish
the anguish of adults
as much: a man
explaining his marriage to the darkness
where his dog sits
silent and the mule waits to eat. In all the field of natural law
we wade with our feet
submerged in sucking
mud and it seems
we must stop and
sink at any hour
because we are weak
and the only peace
is in our sleep
and the only power
is in our dreams.