Contributors

SARAH JANE EIKLEBERRY is assistant professor and assistant chair in the Department of Kinesiology at St. Ambrose University in Davenport, Iowa. She earned her M.A. and Ph.D. in health and sport studies at the University of Iowa. In the past, her research has explored identity politics in professional and intercollegiate sport settings. Her more recent research interrogates the ways women's social movements use sport and recreation to recruit and reach out to young women and girls.

BERNARD F. HARRIS JR. is a retired military officer, a former assistant professor and current curriculum specialists at the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College. A Kansas State University doctoral student researching adult education during World War I, he has published articles in the Association for Business and Experiential Learning annual conference proceedings and in the encyclopedia Ethnic and Racial Minorities in the US Military, along with original artwork in Savannah 1779, a book he coauthored.
