Go Back Up

Stuart Friebert

Follow this and additional works at: http://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.1467 Ever and I take your hand And we hold on together.

Joseph de Roche

GO BACK UP

The people sitting at the table with a child are parents, because of money everyone turns the fork over and the child yawns, dessert comes and the father takes a long swallow, but for the most part he keeps to himself, letters on the sideboard contain an occasional reference to the mother’s illness, she asks the child to bathe and change for bed, gives the door one more look. The father shifts his legs, irritation changes to thoughtful dismay, my own son says when I tell him the story as long as he can see some branches through the window he knows the trees must be on the other side of the wall, there is grace in his voice now, we spend most of the night upstairs refilling the humidifier, sometimes we give up and rush him out to the damp air, there is juice for really bad coughing, rain is falling now thank the Lord, it’s between fifty and sixty degrees, the parents turn toward their son, chat with their hands, there are puppets on them from Hungary.