

9-1-1929

Comment

John Ely Briggs

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/palimpsest>

Part of the United States History Commons

Recommended Citation

Briggs, John E. "Comment." The Palimpsest 10 (1929), 351-352.

Available at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/palimpsest/vol10/iss9/5>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the State Historical Society of Iowa at Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Palimpsest by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

Comment by the Editor

BRONZE MARKS THE SPOT

Go, stranger, and tell the Lacedæmonians that we here died in obedience to their laws.

At the Pass of Thermopylae a marble column bore this heroic message of Leonidas and his three hundred Spartans; that whosoever travelled that ancient road might be reminded of their brave defense of Greece against the Persians and spread the story of their sacrifice.

As the Greeks perpetuated the memory of their achievements in arms and other exploits, so it has been customary from time immemorial among civilized people everywhere to mark the sites of splendid deeds, of national triumphs, and the earthly abodes of deities and men. It is altogether fitting that they should do this, for the commemoration of noble lives is one of the most effective ways of preserving and cherishing the heritage of the past. Whether by means of imposing tombs or by simple tablets of bronze, the motive is the same. Deep-rooted in human nature is a universal respect for the accomplishments of mankind, ancient as well as modern. Perhaps this devotion to ancestral careers is merely an expression of the rather materialistic trait of admiration for success, but the result is none the less desirable on that account. Is there any one who is not thrilled to be where great events transpired or stand where great men stood?

That future generations may know more about the history of Iowa, it is important that the dwelling-places of pioneers, statesmen, and poets, the scenes of memorable events, and the location of historic buildings should be appropriately marked. Visible reminders of the work of our illustrious citizens will tend to cultivate a historical sense and to inspire reverence for the fortitude, energy, and wisdom of the men and women who laid the foundations of this Commonwealth. A true appreciation of the past is essential for a proper evaluation of the present. Since everybody goes motoring now, he who rides may read, if the record is carved in stone or written on bronze by the wayside.

J. E. B.