1973

A in Black

Linda T. Lombardo

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview
Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.1671

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
A IN BLACK

You could tell it was suicide when the black skirt stepped out of her closet. It fit her body like a slap. She would stop washing her hair; it darkened in clumps stuck on her skull. Black shoes, a black sweater—she looked more and more like a nun.

She knew black was the purest color, the absence of color, the warmest, not evil or frightening, but reliable. It helped her think. It helped her live on the edge of a razor, of a tenement roof, of a rough, beckoning sea.

Dressed like this she would face the death temptation for days, every second a prayer that it come soon, clean and quick, that she be worthy of it, that it be kind to her, Death’s sister, Death’s constant companion.