Who Is It?

Stephen Berg
WHO IS IT?

Words drift in, whose I can’t say.
It’s late. All yesterday the sun poured itself out over the yards and houses but it’s cloudy now, a small rain dampens the street. Those words seem to fly around inside me, blue wings, blue tails, whizzing and flapping. Who is it trying to tell me about her grief?
A darkness only the old can swallow begins. I taste the bitterness she tastes.
Mine. April. Fuzzy green breasts everywhere. I sit under them on the steps in the stunned air, the lamps open their light and the stars grow visible and silence like a hand thrust over my mouth suddenly covers things human.

REMEMBERING AND FORGETTING

I don’t know where my father’s ashes should lie.
I drive to the cemetery to find out
and when I get there, passing under the gnarled walnut trees by the church-like crematory fortress, on the office windowsill there’s a box the size you’d wrap a wine glass in for a gift with brown paper and string around it and a white label on top with Sidney H. Berg
typed on it.

I put both my hands around it, him.
and stand there holding it out in
