Happy in Sunlight

William Stafford empty as big dark windows will line up for you.

Like that, I was here, and I stopped too.
Somewhere in stillness the lights came on, for their own pale being, and I listened with all my life for something else, quickly, the way you do.

Happy in Sunlight / William Stafford

Maybe it's out by Glass Butte some time in late fall, and sage owns the whole world. Even the obsidian chips left by the Indians glitter, out of their years. Last night's eager stars are somewhere, back of the sky.

Nothing where you are says, "It's me only." No matter how still the day, a fence wire hums for whatever there is, even if no one is there. And sometimes for luck, by neglecting to succeed that day, you're there, no one else, and the fence wire sings.

FIELDS OF ACTION

The Poem as a Field of Action: Guerilla Tactics in Paterson / Paul Mariani

A plan for action to supplant a plan for action:
In those dark days of December, 1940, with the German Stukas dive-bombing over London, ringing the city with fire, T. S. Eliot, from his fire Previously unpublished material by William Carlos Williams copyrighted 1976 by Florence H. Williams. Published by permission of New Directions Publishing Corporation.