

1977

The Language of Starvation

Paul Nelson

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Nelson, Paul. "The Language of Starvation." The Iowa Review 8.2 (1977): 66-66. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.2200>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

The Language of Starvation / Paul Nelson

Huddled on our stools, we carve at blankness, to make meat hang or dance, hold itself from falling.
We smear and chew, smoke and erase looking through the young Calcutta bones hooked before us on the rafter,
his teeth still growing in the air.
He lets his arms swing down on their metal clips and springs, one palm back, the other forward
as for alms.

The ulna parallels the radius
on this side, crosses on the other.
We see the backside by recollection,
like fear when it isn't there,
hunger when we do not feel it.
We imagine the flesh we sit on,
our organs clutched like birds
in a covered cage, the asp peeking through the girdle. Today we want a live model; we want our mothers, and can't imagine from this armature
anything we may have eaten.

Binge / Paul Nelson

Men in felt hats
slough along the river flats
where someone said you flashed beneath the bridge.
Or were you simply smiling?

They find you; you are being blind, staring down again. They grab your coat,
turn you to the door, the sun,