The Pond at Dusk · Jane Kenyon

When a fly wounds the water the wound soon heals. Swallows tilt and twitter overhead, dropping now and then toward the outward-radiating signs of food.

The green haze on the trees changes into leaves, and what looks like smoke floating over the neighbor's barn is nothing but apple blossoms.

But sometimes what looks like disaster is disaster. Then the men struggle with the casket, just clearing the pews; then long past dark a woman sits, distracted, over the ledger and the till.
