1985

Death and Morality

Sharon Olds

Follow this and additional works at: http://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.3176 the way my father lies there now with his eyes open, then the lids come down and the milky crescent of the other world shines there for a moment before sleep. I cannot push him forward or hold him back, I just stay beside him the way the boat stays abreast of the Channel swimmer at night, you know you cannot touch them, you see them faintly glowing there in the dark water, the strong pathetic star-shape of the human body.

DEATH AND MORALITY

The one thing I like about my father’s dying is it is not evil. It is not good and it is not bad, it is out of the moral world altogether, and once I am out of the moral world I can live as easily as any animal made to live in the element it inhabits. I can watch them empty his catheter bag, pouring the pale ember fluid into the big hospital measuring cup, it is neither good nor bad, it is only beautiful, it is just the body. Even his pain, when his face contracts, and his mouth makes a thick sucking snap when his jaws draw back is not bad, no one is doing it to him, there is no guilt, no shame, there is only pleasure and pain. This is the world where sex lives, the world of the nerves, the world without God, the world of seasons, the creation of the earth, we kiss him in it, we stroke back his gummed gelatinous hair, his wife and I on either side, we wipe the flow of saliva like ivory clay from the side of his mouth, his body feels us loving him outside the world of the moral, as if we were making love to him in the woods and far away in the field we could hear the distant hymns of the tent-meeting, smaller than the smallest drop of green-black woods dew on his body as we dip to touch him.

STILL LIFE

I lie on my back after making love, breasts white in shallow curves like the lids of soup dishes, nipples shiny as berries, speckled and immutable.
My legs lie down there somewhere in the bed like those great silver fish drooping over the edge of the table.
Scene of destruction, scene of perfect peace, sex bright and calm and luminous as the scarlet and blue dead pheasant all maroon neck feathers and deep body wounds, and on the center of my forehead a drop of water round and opalescent, and in it the self-portrait of the artist, upside down, naked, holding your brushes dripping like torches with light.