Childhood in Jacksonville, Florida

What is happening to me now that loved faces are beginning to float free of their names like a tide of balloons, while a dark street wide enough only for carriages, in a familiar city, loses itself
to become South America?

Oh I am the last member of the nineteenth century!
And my excitement about sex, which was not of today, is diffusing itself in generosity of mind.

For my mind is relaxing its grip, and a fume of antique telephones, keys, fountain pens, torn roadmaps, old stories of the way Nan Powell died (poor girl!) rises in the air detached but accurate—
almost as accurate
as if I'd invented them.

Welcome then, poverty!
