

1986

To a Real Standup Piece of Painted Crockery

George Starbuck

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

---

Recommended Citation

Starbuck, George. "To a Real Standup Piece of Painted Crockery." The Iowa Review 16.1 (1986): 123-123. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.3318>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

To a Real Standup Piece of Painted Crockery

I wonder what the Greeks kept in these comicstrip canisters.
Plums, milletseed, incense, henna, oregano.
Speak to me, trove. Tell me you contained dried smoked tongue once.
Or a sorcerer or a cosmetologist's powders and unguents.
And when John Keats looked at you in a collection of pots
it was poetry at first sight: quotable beautiful teleological concatenations of thoughts.

It's the proverbial dog of a poem, though:
slobbering panting and bright-eyed like a loquacious thug
or a spokesperson embattled on behalf of a sociopolitical thesis* to which he has not had access owing to the need-to-know basis.

And he never says which pot. Just an oasis of tease in a sea of tilth, kind of a concrete catachresis bopping along with timbrels, irrepressible as Count Basie, fabulous I mean classic I mean vout,
keeping the buckwheat in and the weevils out while the rest of us get and spend and ache and earn and go to the Bruce Springsteen concert and take our turn lining up at the Metropolitan to look at the Macedonian gold krater and promising ourselves to read up seriously.

---

* (Beauty : Truth = Ignorance : Bliss). Consult Precis.