1988

The Housewife Dreams of Order

Judith Skillman

Follow this and additional works at: http://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.3674

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
whitecaps and the imaginary skulling of knees, and the woman and the man who fished away from us, while I clutched my purse; the catch they hid from us while the optical illusion of the sun died away, all of it as essential as water.

THE HOUSEWIFE DREAMS OF ORDER

They say a spray of lavender hung upside down in a closet, they say lemons. But she knows better. She lets the old screen off its hook and stands clear. There, it is morning. It is morning, and noontime, and evening again, yet she has not moved.

She is planted squarely in the space of their comings and goings, she is waxen and broad leafed, her shoulder blades oiled as a fine wood, her mind swept clean.

Nothing moves in her, no shadows upon the triangle of her throat and neck, no kerchief. The wind is a rosin which plays her hair.

130