around her raveled elastic swimsuit.
She’d throw me a pack and buy me a cone just so it would look good. I’d sit where the old-timers in clean pressed bibs watched trains, eat my cone, smoke a butt, and listen for the old Chessie to squeal through town, drowning out the smell of cows.

A Woman by the Mississippi

Her expression is nothing to look at. You would think her occasional pats of the water, the rippled buildings reflecting, boats and people thinning out with each wave was a romantic thing, but it isn’t.

The Mississippi is like a fat slug.
Its surface images of thin, rheumatic couples holding hands edge the river, and break the sand—slurry crabs hide their faces, distorted, tinged in the dirty light.

The river isn’t beautiful today.
Its brown mouth spits up stones along the shore, the pitted ones layered on layers of smooth snail and crab shells.
And only the weepy tree at the river’s back waves over the water soft and green.
