

1991

Ballroom Dancing

Fleda Brown Jackson

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

---

Recommended Citation

Jackson, Fleda Brown. "Ballroom Dancing." The Iowa Review 21.1 (1991): 102-102. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.3967>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

BALLROOM DANCING

My father did her hair that night as he always did, as long as he talked her into keeping it long.
He'd stand behind her with the hairbrush and pull her ponytail through the wire chignon form and tuck and pin loose ends until it came out tight and sexy as a seal, just the way she hated it, and hated his fingertips cupped around the bun as if it were a nice fat breast.
He'd ask me to judge if it was set too low, or high.

That night she was the best I remember of her, in her three strands of fake pearls, her glazed white dress with bird's-wing sleeves and collar.
We walked the two blocks to Mrs. Keller's dance studio, where we took turns, parents, then young ladies and gentlemen, traveling through our box-steps under lowered lights, then only fathers with daughters, across the unsteady surface, my carefully pinned mother at the side, holding the ballet bar, both parents lost to each other. The steps came hard to me. I brought all my delicate instrumentation to bear on keeping my mother's place in the dance under Mrs. Keller's hard brown eyes.