

1992

Through Leaves and Fragmented Light

Jon Silkin

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Silkin, Jon. "Through Leaves and Fragmented Light." The Iowa Review 22.1 (1992): 83-83. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.4100>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

and weeping father, divorce, the church's legal knife. There were chairs and heavenly cups; a man, with unclenched fist blessed me and vanished;

it was as if I thought I could not die.

THROUGH LEAVES AND FRAGMENTED LIGHT

Through leaves and fragmented light the cricket flakes her shaped notes off wings. Crouching by a woman in pain, in the hair on my arm, on wood, or its faecal ash, she has made visible the idea for a spring hardened to tear, slowly apart, our bodies. She is not that idea: a contralto, her oily discs twanged into our lives. If what it is to make pain, what more to clash this soft battering consequence, lyric percussion, a pebbled softly rattled water, that unfastens the two selves of one mind, to stiffened facing flighted wings.

I search for, find your body-sound flickering winter in ash's doldrums, the atomic drowsing in a hearth. And with you waiting is remembering, where none need rise in the dark. Tell her, it is so.

for Margaret and Michael Mott