THE SAVING GRACE OF MOZART

After the stroke, my grandmother, snug in the nautilus of her own curled spine would slow-stab violent gestures with the one knitting needle she clenched on her good side as she tried to talk—to whom?— we knew she couldn't hear our answerings even if we had been there to answer.

We kept her alive, I think, by leaving her chiefly alone —scary, to get visited by vaguely familiar giants—, though once in a fit of benevolence we squeezed into her humid room, the four of us: my sister me the one flute and the other.

How did we discover silver speech would be the thing to reach her remaining registers?

—as if disability

distills us to a purity where only beauty reaches us

(we knew we weren't beautiful, but the flutes, the flutes!).

The rest I guess we generate of our own accord

the way, with the clear side of her bitter brain, she once wove scratchy sweaters that we still dutifully donned on our quick summer visit . . .

But this once we stayed, we bobbed, we played accurate Mozart, the paired flutes shuttling back and forth to scale the damp woof her dying left across the air, scrambling to reach a high, sturdy dryness they hoped would transport them once and for all and maybe take her, too, into the realm of the boy-genius in punctual heaven — .
