Small Yellow Wasps

Radcliffe Squires

Follow this and additional works at: http://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.4145

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
This universe affords, then, no place to say goodbye.
Only these innumerable places where I say hello.

The preceding poems are reprinted with permission of the publisher:

SMALL YELLOW WASPS

When my hoe shifted their nest in the roots
Of a lilac they became, for a bit,
Pure will, a shower of perseids.

In another moment they had forgot
Me: I'd moved six feet away
To watch how they rose and fell
Above the nest, as if on poles
Of light. Then they forgot that, too,
And went on in their usual way
To do the things wasps do.

The last wasp is the first. Nothing to him
Is clear, nothing obscure.
Everything is ecstasy, everything oblivion
Non sequitur follows non sequitur.

In the wasp's side
Sleeps the forgotten bride.