

1993

A Letter Home

Ovidi Montllor

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Montllor, Ovidi. "A Letter Home." The Iowa Review 23.2 (1993): 6-7. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.4260>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

Ovidi Montllor

A LETTER HOME

Dearest Antonia,
here I am
so far from home.
Raindrops fall
on the dirty windows
of the bar
as I wait for a glass of wine,
and a bit of deceit.
That's my last resort,
you know: deceit,
I'll be filled with it.
To go on living.
To go on enduring.
To go on loving.
I've sent you the money
(like every month).
So far, no chance of a raise . . .
be patient . . . it will come.
I've kept some of it
to buy a coat.
Winter is much harsher
without your body.
They want to move me
to a quieter department and soon—please God—
I'll find a house
and you and the child will come.
My roommate has been ill.
Typical now, you know . . .
the winter . . .

I haven't heard from you
in a week.
Are you ill?
You make me suffer terribly,
so far from home.
Write to me, please,
I need you.
Next year, perhaps,
we'll buy a car.
Who would have guessed!
And we can send the child
to school for free.
And money enough
to stop weeping.
But it will be, you know,
far away from home . . .
Wine does not help
me forget certain things,
this wine here,
on my table.
It is still raining, Antonia.
Tomorrow will be Sunday
and we will not go for a walk,
the three of us.