

1993

Ave Maria

Michael Morse

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Morse, Michael. "Ave Maria." The Iowa Review 23.2 (1993): 105-106. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.4294>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

AVE MARIA

Ave, Ave, the trick is to stay crisp in this milk, to float through this winter steady as the rain we've seen, to wait for the days to lengthen so we may see our first bat, because we have no caves in which to hide our furred bodies when the wind slaps cold like a new-skin whip, Ave, Ave, we were boys once, we thrived on a game where we would die and lie still, hold the breath in our lungs and rise up in minutes to take someone new, it was no miracle when we rose, rose from the leaf piles—true soldier, the canteen is a thought that never lies still, booted or bootless in the mud and milky ice, Ave we were girls once, we put versions of ourselves in rooms we modeled ourselves, although the floors were fake and the walls lacked good paper, although the southern exposure was only a bulb of low wattage, and when the necks of our doll-selves did not turn we would twist until they would.

Ave—drink your juice, mend the cuff, love the way your hands on your kickback hips are meant as imperative joists, how you liken your fears to small paper boats on a sound—small boats on a sound, harken the herald, he's in your face: Ave, rise and shine Ave, enough of your narcoleptic fettering, all around us lie the addendum of agendas, it is truly an age of consent (might we hustle and invest ourselves?) we've already signed for the package; you are outstanding in your involuted ways.
Soldier, doll, look at how the dalmatians on every block cower and hunch forth in a rabid wag-dance, Ave, Ave, you can sing the songs we used to hum, get up.