

1993

Glyph

A. V. Christie

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Christie, A. V.. "Glyph." The Iowa Review 23.3 (1993): 166-166. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.4344>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

Four Poems · A. V. Christie

COIN

In the dark inside my skull rests a coin—passage to the next world. The ferryman will take it from under my tongue. As it warms in his palm he will mint my body a rich future.

What hidden currency will help in this world?
To whom do I give the ruby-throated birds, breast-bound
and frenzied? my dreams lined with glittering Orion?
the answering song through the flute of bone?

I gather the snow's loose change to give someone.
I save air turned to coins in the frozen pond;
I save the pale moon where, in winter,
geese and swans fold their wings and shine.

GLYPH

With each moment we make a history
between us out of secrets, the wet rings bottles leave on dark tables receding
down the time line, the harbor's blank light,
the Elvis pocketknife in the junkstore
where I shook a snowglobe full of glitter falling on the unremembered landmark.
My legs touching yours, the shared bottle might be the place to begin deciphering—
with the locusts in the suburban elms,
their long sound as though devouring the night.
And sure, make the bottle make a sound too,
wind in its mouth: deep, anticipatory,
like a foghorn, sustained, a code, a warning.