1995

Eulene's "Noche Oscura"

Carolyne Wright

Follow this and additional works at: http://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.4456

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
Eulene’s Noche Oscura
Carolyne Wright

When Eulene walked in, habits turned the color of strangle-vines. Nuns scrubbed the chapel on their knees, the wrathful afternoon glowering through stained glass, choirstalls halved by Manichaean shadow.

Now,
Eulene sneaks out during Evening Prayer to work on her icon of Big Nun—fishwife in a chain-gang rosary and goat’s-hair veil, her Popeye forearms tattooed with the Pontiff’s face.

Eulene hums snatches of the Vatican Rag and the house gets narrower.

Who else would laugh at the prioress’s black tabby with white paws and monsignor collar, or christen it Magnificat at the vestry water cooler? All night it yowls from the dead hemlock in the convent close, Eulene’s cri-de-coeur’s semblable.

What is she after? She’s weary of tinsel stars, names in neon aureoles breakdancing on the big marquees. Through “Religious Preference” she still draws a line straight as a brain-scan.
In Sunday School
she learned Sign of the Cross as Theatre. Later, she wore earplugs against the sound of one hand clapping, deprogrammers her parents hired hot on her trail.

These days,
she answers their calls
in Dracula's Daughter's voice:
"Sacre Bleu Convent, Stigmata Vile You Vait."

She's good at shrinking herself to fit disappointment. When she hears the prioress's boots on the stairs
she dumps her crayons in the potted plants, drops Big Nun into the frame behind the Founding Mother's portrait.

She stands up to collect her dogface.
When she looks down, a stranger's shadow glides from underneath her shoes.