ENCOUNTERS 1970

Reluctantly I left the young woman to hitchhike westward on the Chicago turnpike after her three day social call on the lam from trashing a draftboard in Pennsylvania by pouring lamb's blood obtained from a butcher with a pigtail over the records.

When I returned, I found a man on my doorstep wearing a brown fedora over a brown suit with brown shoes. As we finished talking, he stood stiffly, and removed from his coat a printed card, and read me The Harboring Act.
