the late spring of 1970 was a sense of frustration over their apparent lack of influence on American policy. The violence of the demonstrations of May 1970 was an acute response to President Richard Nixon’s decision to invade Cambodia on April 30. The violent demonstrations that erupted in Iowa and throughout the nation were the explosion of tensions that had been growing for months and years, touched off by the spark of the Cambodian invasion.
The demonstrations got off to a mild and undramatic, but perhaps prophetic, start on April 24. That day, seventy-five students presented petitions to University of Iowa president Willard Boyd demanding the end of the Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) as a university-sponsored program. President Boyd was not available, but his assistant, Robert Engel, accepted the petitions and promised that President Boyd would consider them.

Rising tensions, however, quickly exacerbated the situation. On April 28, a set of the Johnson County Selective Service files in the local Selective Service office was set afire. Iowa City police viewed the fire as political in nature, but concluded that it was not related to a bomb explosion the previous night in downtown Iowa City. The following night, a typically innocuous dormitory water fight turned into an angry demonstration at the Iowa City Civic Center when rumors spread that some of the participants had been arrested.

The demand for an end to the university's ROTC program, which would become a central issue in the weeks to come, was the objective of a peaceful demonstration on May 1. A crowd of seven hundred demonstrators marched from the university's Pentacrest area to the new Recreation Building across the river in an effort to halt an ROTC awards ceremony scheduled for that day. Brushing aside six campus policemen who tried to block the doorway, the protesters carried on peaceful discussions about the war and ROTC. They lingered until it was announced that the awards ceremony had been cancelled.

After these demonstrations, Iowa campuses remained quiet until May 4, when news spread that four students had been killed by National Guardsmen at Kent State University in Ohio. The immediate response to the incident was a call throughout Iowa for participation in a national boycott of classes on Wednesday, May 6. The call for a boycott met a strong response. At the University of Northern Iowa, the faculty voted to turn their classes over to discussions of the war, while at Drake University 2,500 students congregated on the commons and agreed to boycott classes. More active demonstrations occurred at Grinnell College, where student protesters occupied the Air Force ROTC building, and at Iowa State University in Ames, where 150 students held an all-night sit-in at the Armory.

At the University of Iowa, the news of Kent State became a call to arms. Daily Iowan editor Lowell Forte wrote a scathing editorial on Nixon following Kent State, charging that "he has sold the youth of America down the suicidal drain — into the Southeast Asia sewer that has frustrated this nation for the past several years." On May 5 a group of from four to six hundred protesters marched to the National Guard Armory south of campus. Some of the demonstrators attempted to break down the doors of the Armory with railroad ties, while others smashed the windows with rocks. Returning to campus, the demonstrators staged a sit-in in front of the Old Capitol on the Pentacrest. In spite of the presence of some fifty riot-equipped police officers, they then marched on the Civic Center. After a confrontation there, the demonstrators moved to a new location and then dispersed when the police were reinforced by officers from the Iowa highway patrol. As a result of the violent demonstrations on May 5, fifty-one people were arrested and charged with disorderly conduct.

The following day the campus was fairly quiet. Although about five hundred

Boyd Again Urges 'Calm And Reason'

By FRED E. KARNO

University of Iowa President William L. Boyd called again for reason and calm early today in a statement to some 1,000 persons at a Pentacrest rally.

"The cause of peace will not be served by destroying this community," he said. "I feel strongly that we can handle our problems internally. I urge you to Boyd Again Urges 'Calm And Reason'

Thousands of college students were still on strike today and many campuses shut down for the duration of the school year in the aftermath of a week of tragedy and turmoil. Many college officials officially requested, however, that students voted today and Tuesday whether to continue boycotting classes or return to their studies.

The students' strike information center at Brandeis University today listed 53 schools on strike, and said it had confirmed that 173 schools will be struck indefinitely. A ham radio network of 17 stations was set up to disseminate strike information to faculty and students.

Nixon Summons Governors
To Discuss Protest, War

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon summoned the nation's governors to the White House today to discuss campus unrest and Southeast Asia in the wake of student strikes, antiauthoritarian protests and sporadic violence that climaxed in a massive weekend demonstration in the nation's capital.

Nixon called the meeting last week after campus violence erupted following his decision to send American troops into Cambodia with the theme "No business as usual." He said the weekend demonstrations marked the beginning of a grassroots movement swelling across the country.

Antiwar demonstrators said talks would be stepped up to send troops to more campuses and industry in an attempt to cripple the "war economy."

The apparently voluntary campaign against the war appeared to have been set.

Princeton University adopted the proposal last week.

Dartmouth University President T. W. Sanford also announced plans to give students a week off to campaign in November. Nixon was graduated from the university's law school.

Chancellor Albert Bowsher of the University of Illinois, which runs the 18,000-student City University, said he would recommend a two-week period of time for

Old Armory 'Temporary' Destroyed

By JOHN W. JEFFRIES

Firemen destroyed the university-owned Old Armory 'Temporary' building early this morning. "The fire was prevented from spreading to more buildings and industry, and was confined to the structure itself.

Fire Chief Dean Rehme of the Post-Chronicle said the fire was prevented from spreading to more buildings and industry, and was confined to the structure itself.

Old Armory 'Temporary' building had been warned two years ago not to keep any valuable papers or other items in the structure. Consequently, it is believed that losses of any scholarly work were slight.

demonstrators collected for a sleep-in at the Pentacrest, their activities were peaceful, a situation due largely to the efforts of a group of faculty, student, and citizen volunteers wearing white armbands. President Boyd made his own plea for peace on Thursday, May 7, when he cancelled a planned Governor’s Day ceremony, but with a tone of resignation. Boyd added that “It must be clear to all that this cancellation involves a surrender of principle in the interest of public safety.”

The demonstrations continued, however. Early Friday morning, several demonstrators of the hundreds who were in the area broke into the Old Capitol and set off a smoke bomb, raising fears that the building was on fire. President Boyd, who was in Des Moines at the time, ordered the area cleared. As a result, more than two hundred demonstrators were arrested and taken away in university buses. Meanwhile, twenty-three Iowa State students had been arrested in Ames for blocking the entrance to the local draft board office, and Grinnell College officials had announced that the remainder of the college semester would be cancelled in order to allow students and faculty to participate in anti-war activities.

The period of violent demonstrations sparked by the Cambodian invasion and the Kent State incident reached a peak on Iowa campuses during the weekend of May 9 and 10. In Iowa City on Friday night a frame building called the Old Armory Temporary went up in flames. By Saturday morning, Governor Robert Ray had stationed about three hundred National Guardsmen within five miles of the city, and National Guard helicopters were cruising above its streets. “It was an unbelievable fact,” said one highway patrolman later, “that we were carrying shotguns. It looked like the Cambodian front.” Reacting to the rising tone of violence in Iowa City, President Boyd declared: “The cause of peace will not be served by destroying this university.”

After meeting with university officials, President Boyd announced on Sunday that the university would not be closed, but that students who feared for their safety could leave the campus without being penalized. In his statement, Boyd said that he sympathized with the protesters’ demands but that he viewed education as an equally important issue. “For those who would say that the military intervention into Cambodia is an important symbol,” Boyd declared, “I must respond that learning in a free society is an equally important symbol. If the University were to give in to force at this time, a great principle would be lost.”

Boyd’s decision led to what was described as a non-obstructional, non-violent strike. By late Tuesday, nearly 12,000 of the university’s students had left the campus. Though the strike continued throughout the week, Governor Ray withdrew the National Guard units from the Iowa City area on Wednesday. By Sunday, May 17, the three weeks of violent protest drew to a close with an Ecumenical Pentacost held by Iowa City churches.

In the days that followed, the Iowa City campus and college campuses around the state returned to the calm that normally prevails at exam time. The energy of the anti-war movement in Iowa was channelled into more traditional political directions, resulting in efforts such as the campaign to adopt Amendment 609, which would have put constitutional limits on the President’s war making powers.
