GODSPEED

you are descending swinging stairs to bid godspeed to the sea, godspeed, the salty lips of evening say, and amber melts in the tongues of foam, yes, emptiness strikes just then, when the wine runs out, the salt settles on roots and rolling sand starts to desiccate rocks: at high noon, when the hourglass is turned over, it strikes, but the one who passes this, like the youth who passes through the kingdom of death to become a man, knows: it does not coincide with the soul, as the mirage confirms
