THE GREED OF WANTING CHILDREN

I can't have, makes me cry with hunger, eat only sweets and bitter Baker's chocolate, nibble at my bed. Last night I dreamed of penises, not sex, not men, just phalluses, stalagmites rising from a dark cave floor. Their surfaces as smooth to touch as the penises of men I've known but rather chill and cruel. Outside, Lake Michigan slaps the white rock shore. This is what I want:

to be a bone, to sink like salvage to the bottom, to see no more horizon, only water, only water.
