Cicadas in the hot trees rasp zydeco, clack exoskeletal flamenco, exhibitionist rumba, Antonio clapping hands over his ears. And me?
My God. Thirteen years since Point Breeze.
Missed the first garbage day. Maggots on wet tar the next. Chris culled agony from the hive. I chewed what combs she wedged in my cheeks. She jammed me in. Oh honey we droned.

Bet on it: Expect cattle, find buffalo; pack a picnic, hear the pilot fuck The Screamer, floorboards rumbling Billy Joel.
I find open-casket viewings barbaric, but, like you, I gape at a goat skull wedged in creased dust under the olive, zygote curled hazy on the monitor, a mother and gate-mouthed toddler death the next minute—women keen, mobs storm relief trucks, beautiful as is, suchness, samsara is nirvana. I whooped in the jeep Klaus careened to the beach—discos, hamberger joints, tourisms, then a battalion of bare tits, yes, breasts and the women they graced, ah, sashay of hue and posture buffing me, Herr Bumpkin Ogle—forty-three, fifteen, no matter—and when the day’s best beauty spread oil armpit to belly, oh wind, oh blue, ought-to-be-bottled Mediterranean wind, wit jumped ship, ideas rotted, the beams of my inner cathedral bowed under the light’s weight. Sexual healing, Marvin Gaye called it. Aye!

shouts Bluebeard in the overgrown notebooks of my fifteenth summer, rutting in the Sea Islands, butchering Choctaw, once lulling a harem naked with nothing more than a few strummed chords.
Three decades later I can stroke the silk they unwrapped from their hips.

Narcissus goes hard to jowl, bristle, character, raw millet cast on cold cereal, and still loves the ghost of delight as much as delight itself—so be it, straddle the goddamned Rubicon, bliss unwrapped under the bodhi perhaps six pill bugs curled on tile, vertigo on the Murcia bus, scorpion flung from a sandal, bread a large hand spreads with peach jam, insects half the size of my fist working their legs as they die.
