The Making of the World

Pattiann Rogers

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.5132
Pattiann Rogers

THE MAKING OF THE WORLD

First and second violins and violas in steady crescendo make themselves possible in straight, brass seams of early morning sun coming through a welter of sumac and sassafras hedge.

The orange-scarlet of rose moss, the iris of purple, the white garden moth captured and pinned to the board become in reality this minor treble chord when played in arpeggio, the last note held to stillness.

This cord in bass, whenever struck thrice and ringing in all its tones, means murder.

The sound of bagpipes, organ pipes, pan pipes, and wooden whistles takes its form from the rush of stone stalactites in multiple spears across a cavern ceiling. No, rather it is a thematic wind through dry thistles, nettles, thorny grass blades and sparrow shafts that is the soul born spontaneously with bagpipes, organ pipes, pan pipes and whistles of wood.

The flicking swaggle of the racing Sonoran lizard, the swelter of horseshoe crabs mating in a rampage of ocean salt and semen are, within what they are, the event of melody played rapidly in counterpoint by masters of guitar, oboe and horn.

This comes closer: glass chimes and one cymbal with soft brush create the night sky quietly restless with stars, just as the still surface of a pond restless in slow rain creates glass chimes and one cymbal with soft brush.

To simplify—you and I side by side in bed on the blue-checked quilt mean: place fingers on these strings, hold bow at this angle, draw easily.

THE STARS beneath MY FEET

Not the burrowing star-nosed mole nor the earth roots of the star-thistle nor the yellow star flowers of stargrass, not the fallen webs and empty egg sacs of star-bellied spiders, not blood stars nor winged sea stars tight on their tidal rock bottoms, and I don’t mean either the lighted star-tips of the lantern fish and angler fish drifting miles deep at the ocean’s end of their forever good night.

I mean those actual stars filling the skies directly below me with ignited