2003

My Husband Is a Dermatologist

Elizabeth Skurnick

Follow this and additional works at: http://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.5741

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
My Husband Is a Dermatologist

I am afraid a creature will rise from the bottom
   Of the pond of our country house to devour me.
I find the grassy shore repulsive, and the clotted earth
   Unbearable. I find it necessary to rinse the turkey curry
Container out before returning it to the plastic bag,
   Out not in the pond water, but in the children’s water
Fountain, rinsing the burnished surface of the children’s Water fountain until it is clean, returning the turkey curry
Container to the watery plastic bag, then to the dishwasher,
   My clothes to the washing machine, I to the shower, sneakers
To the washing machine, cloth of the laundry hamper
   To the washing machine, a sprinkle of Comet
Down the kitchen sink, the residue carried—
   And it is carried—somewhere I am not responsible.
I was never, ever his patient. I have had the skin
   Of a baby—pacific, luminous—since the day I was born.
Jacketed, he is intent on their celestial backs. If he could,
   He would scour the sky itself, and empty it clean of stars.