The Whistler's Map

Ruth Foxe Blader

Follow this and additional works at: http://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.5906
The Whistler’s Map

It is where the boy just went down in.
It is the wire cribbing
drawn back in wet conceit.
It is the nothing’s something,
ice fixed over puddles
closed and frozen gravel.
It is the plus or minus some eerie doubt-eye and the leaves rippled in their frost pile.
Difficult of color.
Cribbled, plunked of ice,
the undrained swimming pool is leafed-over.
Ice threatens to crack the concrete back.
It’s down the hill from that.
Drain skeleton. A mustard smell.
A smoke hole, cement pipe,
highway laid over.
It leads to the river.
It is where we are always going,
we cannot cut around.
Here, fate is like ice, like purple, like hair. It is there, where the boys plunder, wall-less, under water.
It is the ripple currently wasting.
Drained, diked, dammed.
The winter-shards. The wire roll. The host.
There is this fixed and unfixed lack.
The lock. The gravel under.