

2004

Zeus

Laura Kasischke

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Kasischke, Laura. "Zeus." The Iowa Review 34.3 (2004): 121-122. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.5909>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

LAURA KASISCHKE

Zeus

All night I ride my motorcycle up and down the dirt road between your house and town. Just as sleep's about to slip its loose white sack over your nose and mouth, I'm back, kicking up the gravel with my tires—for

I am dust and sound, and nobody fucks with dust, and silence has a price. I have a long grey pony-tail and a jacket with Meet Your Maker embroidered on the back.

For now, you can't quite fathom that, though you think hard, late at night, when sleep won't come, and know in the empty notebook of your heart that where thought ends, there's God. And you're no longer young. The night sky's a big mouth, opened wide. At least two times you would have died if it hadn't been for my rough kindness. That time in Vegas with the gun, and what was that other one? Passes understanding, doesn't it? Or maybe I'm just out here having fun. Maybe if you lived on a little lake, I'd ride my jet ski on it every night. I'd wear a Hawaiian shirt, and I'd be young and blond. In any case, sleep will come soon enough. Tonight you can lie awake in the dark and thank your lucky stars that I chose your dirt road to ride my motorcycle on.