JENNIFER ATKINSON

Island Mandala

From the mainland rocks to the island rocks she rows according to the tides.
With each trip a sack of dirt, a seedling, a pillbug — in thirty years a new world between the boulders, a New World with pine tree, thistle, beachpea, and a green swale of grasses wide enough to lie down on, wide enough to imagine lying down on to listen to wind in a forest, surf on the coast, birds singing in a meadow:
a pure land. The Pure Land. She calls it There.
