

2005

On a Pilgrimage Mountain in Tea Country

Jennifer Atkinson

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Atkinson, Jennifer. "On a Pilgrimage Mountain in Tea Country." The Iowa Review 35.2 (2005): 56-56. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.6052>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

On a Pilgrimage Mountain in Tea Country

Tropic midwinter: a shiver down the spine of the tea fields.
We lie down off the path, on the stupa's dark side:
Uncratered, smooth, lime-washed moon.

The lanterns of the pilgrims mark the way to the mountaintop,
The lanterns of the stars obscure the ways into sleep.

The Buddha's footprint marks the holy rock at the summit.
It is known Shakyamuni never trekked this far south.

After sunrise we wake, cold and rained-on,
To pilgrims returning: laughter, bangles, tin teapots.

To banish sleep, Dharuma sliced off his eyelids.
Where he cast them, half-moons of skin, the tea plant grew—
Green leaf, bud, the wealth of empires undreamt of.

When it rains, the footprint fills with rain.
When it clears, the footprint warms with sun.

Brazen St. Sparrow, self-ablaze, self-forgetful,
Sips from the instep and bathes in the heel.