2007

Oxygen Masks Our Chandeliers

Sean Starr

Follow this and additional works at: http://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.6350

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.
oxygen masks our chandeliers

before and after k.l.

i trust you i tell you in the way one looks at commercial pilots upon boarding you bristle i braille the hell out of you corrugate & sieve

    a fugue of muted notes a hundred tiny planets tied by thread constellate a retrograde ambivalence in retrograde our two bodies hover above this mess we’ve made a thousand broken pieces dirty sheets igauzu falls couldn’t clean

we all move like thinally sliced scallions over murky soup suspended, making orbital conditions sensual drawn showing composure, control crossing the atlantic—the words move as well mirrored, violent across collection, recollection, the soft white powder of counter pollination leaving rips almost real in the body
the body that changes planes that decomposes that softly searches for salt along setaceous pools, pulls like someone says, you think i am water
abyssal, because i feel like water to you because no bodies have been recovered tongue of the ocean—off Andros but even there are rivers, seiche waves crescendos of light lost in landscape's condensation, glacis of dune or dost spread both ways thin then there's this this the wake of forwards shadow the naming that steps unwittingly almost, a sweet possession the things in the sea that cling making suddenly organic or seep with sound softly music-like or mucous into fuselages moving enemy to anemone suddenly cup-shaped and colorful amidst the barnacles