Almost as If

Gerald Bruns
Almost As If

The if-feeling is not a feeling which accompanies the word “if.”
—Wittgenstein, Philosophical Investigations

Here is a word
with a corona of uses
ghostly intentions
shady senses
nevertheless when pressed a (mostly) single physiognomy if (fr. OE gif)
what if if/then if and only if (iff)
although whether it were an either/or
it wouldn’t matter
but one can feel if differently
imagine Iphigeneia (called Iphimeidea by Hesiod)
her fate set to music
a symphony
in f-sharp major
among suppositions
subjunctives
systems
of suspicion
as if
our future
were junking its alternatives into a past that never was

Hence almost more or less
incompletely
l’entretemps
ellipses
deferring interminably
the messianic decision “if one were to take these words
seriously
they would lead to the madhouse” (Blanchot) so I take them foolishly stopping as I go
our time is nearly up
our present
not quite closed
made of
nomadic terms
falling just short of arrival anywhere
fruitless conditions
refractory facts
useless attention
qualifications
scrolling pointlessly
pale singularities
defeating the sequence of what happens