

2008

This Dream the World Is Having about Itself..

Carolyn Wright

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Wright, Carolyn. "This Dream the World Is Having about Itself..." The Iowa Review 38.2 (2008): 49-50. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.6450>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

CAROLYNE WRIGHT

“This dream the world is having about itself...”

—William Stafford

won't let us go. The western sky gathers its thunderclouds. It has no urgent need of us. That summer in our late teens we walked all evening through town—let's say Cheyenne—we were sisters at the prairie's edge: I who dreamed between sage-green pages, and you a girl who feared you'd die in your twenties.
Both of us barefoot, wearing light summer dresses from the Thirties, our mother's good old days, when she still believed she could live anywhere, before her generation won the War and moved on through the Forties.
As we walked, a riderless tricycle rolled out slowly from a carport, fathers watered lawns along the subdivisions' treeless streets. We walked past the last houses and out of the Fifties, the Oregon Trail opened beneath our feet like the dream of a furrow turned over by plough blades and watered by Sacajawea's tears.
What did the fathers think by then, dropping their hoses without protest as we girls disappeared into the Sixties? We walked all night, skirting the hurricane-force winds in our frontier skirts so that the weather forecasts for the Seventies could come true, the Arapahoe's final treaties for the inland ranges could fulfill themselves ahead of the building sprees. We walked on but where was our mother by then? Your lungs were filling with summer storms, and my eyes blurred before unrefracted glacial lakes.

Limousines started out from country inns at the center of town, they meant to drive our grandparents deep into their eighties.

Our mother in her remodeled kitchen whispered our names into her cordless phone but before the Nineties were over, both of you were gone. Mother's breath was shadow but her heart beat strong all the way in to the cloud wall. You carried your final thoughts almost to the millennium's edge, where the westward-leaning sky might have told us our vocation: in open fields, we would watch the trail deepen in brilliant shadow and dream all the decades ahead of us.

In memory of my sister