Long Vigil

When will we return to the interrupted conversation?
Give me the place and address though the darkness is thick and matches are wet from fog

I recognize footsteps that approach and go away how full the past is of images cut through by sudden lightning

Streets and attics where we lived places of deportation war humiliation and pain
—all drowned

Only sometimes when it's silent a whisper can be heard:
we are here

It's two in the morning why are you already having breakfast?
