2010

Aldabra Island

Amy Lingafelter

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.6867 What are these clothes I'm wearing?
Versions of leather and paper, with no real notice to no one, then all of a sudden it's skin, and there's a list of places I've been,
building, car, building, great green jungle,
put this in the paper about me:

she gave them some broccoli without any bread, whispered too loudly and left them for dead onion pancake make-up, and I've got a disorder that lives, I've got a quarter for laundry, fabric: a likely story, bleach: my new best friend, wife beaters: my things are violent, and it's not that I'm surprised by the faces assembled before me, or the things they say about me, a carnival of drills,

a house, a Dodge, a school, it pays to be specific:
tuxedo, Aldabra, tuxedo, I hunted and smelled and heard.
I ran the motion offense inside the formal wear store.
And I never went nowhere, except here and there and there, Aldabra: full of danger, plants: I've eaten them all, poisoned: I freaking waited, and waited and waited and waited, for a hundred years, a coco-de-mer, a body that floats in the water, because me and the giant tortoise are always vying for attention, skin and skinned and skinny, a shell of our former selves.

My face, my tools, my goal.
A series of random events and my clothes and crags and sense.
It was a short list.
Put this in the paper about me:
perhaps I lay eggs for gentlemen, but nobody never made me swim or stole my clothes or clipped my wing or fouled me hard or clubbed my head or ate my arm or told me to write or wrote my obit or charged me a toll, no matter where I went.

The Iowa Review