

Winter 2013

Katari

Josh Kalscheur

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview>

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Kalscheur, Josh. "Katari." The Iowa Review 43.3 (2013): 70-70. Web.
Available at: <https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.7304>

This Contents is brought to you for free and open access by Iowa Research Online. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Iowa Review by an authorized administrator of Iowa Research Online. For more information, please contact lib-ir@uiowa.edu.

JOSH KALSCHEUR

KATARI

After hours of strict respect from the man who loves me for a time each year, I enter the cookhouse with a mirror and a shard of louver to loosen two teeth of a turtleshell comb from my forehead.

It was a gift to me, the comb.
The skilled threadwork left me leaning. The respect that ran for me now runs from me and I lay down my arms. From a line by the road a hanging skirt drifts upward. I was not always loved so heavily, so accepted into the rhythm of survival, so stalled in a bloodline which bends for no one, not even the beautiful.

In the right darkness, I go to the top of the hill where Americans listen to all the sounds the ocean never makes. I want to clean them from their happiness until the flies gather where fruit splits its sweetness. I want my shore to teach them the smallness of a flower grove, a shadow which sways into the water and lessens.