The Hunchback

James Galvin

Follow this and additional works at: https://ir.uiowa.edu/iowareview
Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://doi.org/10.17077/0021-065X.7469
Today I am captive to a caustic loneliness,
A certain fear that the Future Stone Age
Approaches ineluctably like a fog
Bank moving inland, obliterating any
Particulars of trees, buildings, beliefs,
Not just effacing the world’s most vulnerable
Details, but devouring them. I know
That out there in the fog, April’s oak, ash,
And maple leaves are blindly striving, people’s
Houses crumble while cradling intricacies
Of familial peculiarities.
Even the people who live them will have no
Idea of what they mean in their denials
And self-deceptions as they eat a piece of toast,
Dance barefoot in the grass, water the flowers,
Or turn the page of a novel in which a hunchback
Is spotted hiding in a corner of
An empty swimming pool. Soon it will all
Have turned into a nostalgic fairy tale,
A lie of culture and nature and the Future
Stone Age will arrive to whisper in each of our ears
Everything we always knew was true.