Easter

The police came.

I got my beans
from a small island,

thinking of you
and the baby.

Seagulls eating the bulk of a whale. Its delicate bones projected through a flat drum of skin,

gray streaked with salt

and glut of smooth

inner coil. The police were infinitely calm,

the island lit, whale rolled back. Nobody could look away. You must be thirty now, still plump, carrying that milk scope,

that crisp area of lobe,
your second sight.
